Parish council accused of being 'undemocratic'

Sunningdale: Resident says he was 'banned' from asking councillors questions

A parish council has been accused of being 'undemocratic' after a resident claimed he was 'banned' from asking public questions for half a year.

Royal Borough resident Andrew Hill said he will lodge a formal complaint against Sunningdale Parish Council (SPC), claiming he has been prohibited from speaking at meetings unless he accepts a 'private meeting'.

He accused the parish of being 'undemocratic, not being transparent, and avoiding scrutiny'. SPC did not wish to comment on the complaint but denied Mr Hill's accusations.

At a parish council meeting on July 27, attended by the Local Democracy Reporting Service (LDRS), Mr

Speed read...

A member of the public is planning to lodge a formal complaint against Sunningdale Parish Council, claiming he has been prohibited from speaking at meetings. The parish council denied the accusations.

Hill, who was the only member of the public there, wanted to ask a question about libraries during the public adjournment, a 15-minute segment where registered speakers are allowed to ask questions.

The chairman of SPC, Cllr Anne-Catherine Buxton, did not permit Mr Hill to speak and said he had been offered to meet with her and the vice-chairman to pose questions.

She said: "As chairman of the meeting, I am entitled to make situations happen and we have requested this resident, who is not actually a resident of Sunningdale at all, to have a meeting with myself and the vice-chair. We have now been asking for over six months."

While Mr Hill is not a Sunningdale resident, he said that should not matter as council meetings are open to members of the public and not solely to their respected parish where business owners or motorists who pass through the area but don't live there should be able to voice their concerns.

In the parish's standing orders, which regulates the conduct of council meetings, it does not specify only Sunningdale residents can ask questions or speak at a council meeting - but public participation is at the discretion of the chairman.

Speaking to the LDRS, Mr

Hill claims SPC has effectively 'banned' him from raising questions at council meetings unless he accepts a 'private meeting' with the chairman and vice-chairman.

Mr Hill said it was 'bizarre' that the parish wants to deal with scrutiny 'behind closed doors'.

But SPC says it's not 'private' but a 'personal meeting' to 'openly' discuss his concerns.

It said: "The council has often used this approach with residents in the past who had questions that did not relate to a council agenda, and it has enabled a much more helpful exchange of views."

SPC added Mr Hill could have had his concerns resolved in a 'democratic way' by following their procedures. But Mr Hill deflected, saying he has been following them for months and has hit roadblocks.
